THE M'DONALD ABDUCTION—THE ASHBURTON TREATY—STANDARD FOR CURRENCY.

OTTAWA, Canada, March 18.—In Parliament last night Mr. McKenzie moved an address for the correspondence regarding the abduction of Allen McDonald.

by United States officials. In doing so he hoped that the Minister of Justice was in a position to say whether the report in the newspapers is true or false; that after the United States authorities had admitted the illegality of the proceedings of their officials, the British Minister at Washington had declined to accept the release of the prisoners who had been improperly abducted from British

Sir John A. McDonald was bound to say that the answer given by the British Minister at Washington to Secretary of State Seward's demand for the return of the man with out having communicated with the Government of Canada he had elected not to ask for the liberation of McDonald under the circumstances. The papers in this case had been sent him by the British Minister at Washington and he had supposed to learn that the person illegally abducted had been allowed to be retained in the United States without being sent back to Canada. It was due to the House and to the country to have some explanation of the unprecedented conduct of the British Minister. He would not permit any British Minister to take upon himself to say that he will surrender the rights and liberties of a British subject, whom American authorities have no right to detain.

Mr. John A. McDonald introduced a bill for the extension of the Extradition Treaty. It was, he explained, known to the honorable members that the Ashburton Treaty provided that the Imperial act should remain in force in all the Colonies, and given effect to the treaty; and where such acts were satisfactory to the Imperial Government that then such Colonies should be governed by Colonial and not by Imperial act. Such an act had been adopted by the Imperial Government in the form of a book, in which the Imperial act was printed, and the Colonies of Australia and New-Brumswick the Imperial act alone applied, and its working there had been found to be in a great degree prejudicial. The United States, in giving effect to the Imperial act, provided a very easy machinery to work out the treaty; and the Government of Canada subsequently adopted an act almost similar. As the measure remained in Nova Scotia and New Brunswick. It was not so well adapted to the conditions of the other end, as the measure in Canada. Whenever a felon escaped from Nova Scotia, for instance, to the United States, there had to be an application to the latter Government for his surrender. That application was not made until some time after the escape, and at this time the felon was at large under no restraint. A month or two was spent in this way, much to the hindrance of justice. If such a felon escaped from Canada it was provided by the Criminal Code that the Government of the United States that on information on oath before certain officers appointed by the Government of the United States, should be arrested and held two months if necessary, in order to allow time for the application from the Canadian Government to the British Ambassador at Washington, to obtain rendition of the criminal on the basis of the provisions of the act of the Province of Canada to the whole Dominion.

The bill was then read the first time, and the second reading was ordered for Friday.

The bill is an act in relation to an act whose object is to assimilate the currency of the Dominion. In the event of England and the United States not adopting the recommendations agreed to in Paris, then the bill bringing the Nova Scotia standard up to the present standard of the United States and Canada, would be put in force by proclamation; but if the recommendations were acted upon by the United States, then the bill bringing the Nova Scotia standard up to the force which adapted the currency of Canada to that now used in Nova Scotia, and which would then prevail in the United States.
